THE G. I.'S USE A LANGUAGE OF THEIR OWN, HAVING A NAME FOR EVERYTHING... FOR INSTANCE...

OH, LOOK... THERE GOES THAT NEW SECOND LIEUTENANT.

WHY DON'T YOU WISE UP, KID? DON'T TALK LIKE A YARD-BIRD. WE DON'T CALL THEM SECOND LIEUTENANTS... A NEW LOOEY IS A SHAVE TAIL, OR A JOHN...

SURE, A COLONEL IS A CHICKEN, AND A FIRST SERGEANT IS A TOP-KICK. A STAFF SERGEANT WEARS A ROCKER STRIPE, AND AN INFANTRYMAN IS CALLED A DOG-FACE.

I'M HUNGRY. I WONDER WHAT THE COOK HAS FOR SUPPER?

AH, YOU TALK LIKE A SQUARE. YOU MEAN, WHAT DID THE SLUM BURNERS DESTROY FOR CHOW?!

OH! YOU KNOW, YESTERDAY I WAS ON SICK CALL AND THE DOCTOR SAID...

COVER DOWN, KID, YOU'RE OUT OF LINE. YOU SHOULD SAY, I WENT ON SICK, LAME, AND LAZY LINE-UP, AND THE PILL ROLLERS TOLD ME TO QUIT GOLDBRICKING.

GEE, THERE'S A LOT TO LEARN IN THE ARMY. SAY, WHEN IS PAY DAY...

NOW YOU'RE TALKING. BUT WE DON'T CALL IT PAY DAY. WE SAY THE EAGLE FLIES, SEE? MMM... YOU KNOW, IN THE OLD DAYS, WE USED TO GET BLACK JACKED, FOR GOING OFF-LIMITS.

BLACK JACKED? WHAT DOES THAT MEAN?

WELL, BACK BEFORE WORLD WAR II, WE USED TO GET TWENTY-ONE DOLLARS A MONTH AND IF A MAN WAS PROMOTED, AND THEN GOT INTO TROUBLE - HE WAS BLACK JACKED DOWN TO TWENTY-ONE FROM HIS NEW PAY RATE.

THEY SURE HAVE A STRANGE WAY OF SAYING THINGS IN THIS ARMY...

YEAH... AND IT CAN ALL BE SUMMED UP IN ONE PHRASE: "OH, MY ACHING BACK!"

THE FIRST CAVALRY DIVISION

"We were first in Manila, first in Tokyo—and we'll be the first in Pyongyang!" This was the boast of the hard-hitting troopers of the famed 1st Cavalry Division as they stormed across the Naktong river and closed with the enemy.

The Korean War was approaching its fourth month. Since June the Allied armies, outnumbered and outgunned, had been trying desperately to stop the rampaging Red hordes who had vowed to drive them into the sea. Fighting a rearguard action was foreign to the troopers of the 1st Cavalry who had been trained in lightning offense. They were bitter and angry as they retreated mile after mile.

Finally, they reached the Naktong river and here they were ordered to stand or die. In September the Reds unleashed a powerful attack and thousands of the enemy, led by tanks, stormed the Allied positions, trying to cut communication lines with the key United Nations base at Taegu. At one time the enemy had crossed the river at five points. But each attack was repulsed and the Allies "hung on by their toenails".

Now a tremor of optimism swept through the Allied ranks. The crucial Naktong river line had been held. Cables from the front expressed the opinion that the invasion's back was broken. It was soon apparent that the North Koreans could no longer mount mass attacks aimed at a breakthrough. Their overextended supply lines were hacked to bits by as many as 600 American-Australian Air Force sorties in a single day; their artillery was outgunned ten to one; their few remaining Russian-made T-34 tanks were no match for the new General Pershings.

Red morale was cracking; surrenders were mounting; casualties were cutting down their basic superiority in manpower. The troopers of the 1st Cavalry began to hope that a United Nations counter offensive would not be long in coming.

And then it happened! On September 15th, the Marines landed at Inchon, far behind the enemy lines, and started the drive toward Seoul, the South Korean capital. The 7th Infantry Division also hit the beachhead and drove southward.

Simultaneously, the Allies opened an all-out attack on the southern front. In the days that followed the 1st Cavalry Division pounded its way northward in an effort to link up with the 7th Infantry.

The Reds broke under the terrible onslaught and the 1st Cavalry made history as it raced northward, isolating thousands of communist troops. They captured Waegwan and kept on going. "We've got them now. These cookies are beaten," said Major General Hobart R. Gay, the commanding officer of the Division.

Riding tanks and trucks up the rocky roads, they advanced in the swiftest U.N. stroke of the war. They moved so fast that they literally ran right off the maps they carried and couldn't tell where they were until planes dropped new maps to guide their course.

When they finally succeeded in linking with the 7th Infantry, 30,000 Reds were trapped. They were first across the 38th parallel and made good their boast to be first in Pyongyang, the Red capital.

But valor and glory are an old story in the history of the 1st Cavalry. These rugged troopers have always upheld the best traditions of the United States Army.

The 1st Cavalry Division was organized on August 31, 1921 at Fort Bliss, Texas, and for twenty years it was stationed along the Mexican border until the outbreak of World War II.

Many famous regiments were incorporated into the 1st Cavalry Division. The oldest regiment is the 5th, organized as the 2nd Cavalry Regiment in 1855 and commanded by the then Lt. Col. Robert E. Lee, who resigned his command to lead the Confederate armies in the Civil War.

Perhaps the most renowned of its component units is the old 7th Cavalry, organized in 1866 and commanded by the gallant General George Custer. Successive generations have read the thrilling details of "Custer's Last Stand". In the Sioux War of 1876, the 7th Cavalry advanced against the Indians who were concentrated near the Little Big Horn river in South Dakota. What Custer believed to be a small war party proved to be a huge force of over 6000 Sioux and Cheyenne braves. Trapped by this superior force the troopers, numbering 276 men, fought valiantly but were massacred to the last man.

Another famous component of the 1st Cavalry Division, the 8th Regiment, fought against Sitting Bull and his Indians and in the Mexican Punitive Expedition. The 12th Regiment, organized in 1901, saw duty in the Philippines, on the Mexican border, and in the Canal Zone.

During World War II the 1st Cavalry Division invaded the Admiralty Islands. When the reconnaissance force hit the beach on Los Negros Island, it met only minor resistance and the troopers were well dug in by nightfall.

One of the fiercest battles of the Pacific campaign was fought on Mamote Airstrip. Early in the morning the Japs began fierce counter-attacks. Coming in waves and screaming "Banzai!" they charged recklessly against the American positions. Behind the cavalrymen was the sea. The Japs were all big men, Imperial Marines. Many were drunk and carried bayonets on long poles with which they tried to spear the troopers in their foxholes. But, against great odds, the cavalrymen held the strip and repulsed the attacks. Approximately 4500 Japs were killed in the battle for the Admiralties.

The 1st Cavalry Division was one of the spearhead units invading Leyte and for this action the Division won a citation, with subordinate units also cited. Within five hours enemy-held and stubbornly defended Cataison Airfield fell. Record combat time for the Division was made by the 12th Regiment during the Leyte campaign—seventy-two days in the line without relief.

The 1st Cavalry Division was the first American division to enter Manila in General MacArthur's liberation campaign, starting its dash to the Philippines' capital after landing at Lingayan on the island of Luzon.

At Cabanatuan, north of Manila, the troopers met their first resistance. Surprising the Japs just before daylight they punched through speedily. The retreating Japs blew up every bridge and many streams and rivers had to be forded. The night of February 3rd, 1945 a 1st Cavalry tank clanked past Manila's city limits, first into the city by several hours.

Once inside the city, the units split, one speeding to capture and occupy Malacana Palace and the other crashing the walls of Santo Tomas University, liberating more than 3700 Allied civilians.

The Division remained on Luzon mopping up scattered Jap elements. Late in August, after the capitulation of Japan, it readied itself for the move forward on the road to Tokyo. On September 10th the Division became the first American unit to enter the city of Tokyo and realized the fulfillment of a dream held since first it entered combat.

The 1st Cavalry was on occupation duty in Japan when the Korean War broke out. Shortly afterward they were enroute to Pusan to engage a ruthless enemy.

In the early phases of the Korean War the 1st Cavalry was not up to full fighting strength. In an effort to fill out its ranks it initiated the policy of recruiting South Koreans into each troop and instituted the "buddy system" whereby each cavalryman teamed up with a Korean and instructed him in modern methods of warfare. This policy was highly successful. The South Koreans proved to be valiant and loyal troopers who fought in the best traditions of the Division. This policy was also adopted by other outfits and soon official Army policy proscribed 100 Koreans to every company.

The 1st Cavalry Division boasts two Congressional Medal of Honor winners.

Sergeant Troy A. McGill of Ada, Oklahoma, member of Troop G, 5th Cavalry Regiment, was awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously for heroic action at Mamote Airstrip. When the Japs attacked at dawn all of Sergeant McGill's men were killed or wounded. McGill fired his weapon until it ceased to function. Then with utter disregard for safety, and knowing he faced certain death, he left his foxhole. Using his rifle as a club he engaged in hand-to-hand combat until killed by the enemy.

Pfc. William J. Grabiarz of Buffalo, New York, was awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously for the supreme heroism he displayed in Manila. He met his death when he left his place of safety behind a tank and threw his body over the injured form of his commanding officer, deliberately absorbing a fusillade of Jap bullets.

The shoulder patch of the 1st Cavalry is a large yellow shield with a black diagonal bar and a thoroughbred horse's head in the upper right hand corner. The bar signifies the Division as first in name and in battle. Through the years it has lived up to this reputation.

By their heroism and gallantry the troopers of the 1st Cavalry Division have written a glorious chapter in the annals of the United States Army.
